Public Policy Virtual Conference

July 20-22, 2021

AGENDA

As life approaches a return to normal, NACBH has planned one more virtual public policy conference before we can gather in person in Washington next year. Information and advocacy are more important than ever as we welcome new leadership at key federal agencies, a new Congress focused on public health issues exposed by the pandemic, the looming implementation deadline for the Family First Prevention Services Act, and a bounty of advocacy opportunities in our priority funding and policy areas.

This dynamic program places children's behavioral health services at the center of a unique moment in federal policymaking and encourages open discussion among public and private leaders committed to "building back better," to borrow a phrase. NACBH is excited to host this engaging virtual conference to educate and advocate while helping you make connections with fellow providers.

*UPDATED JULY 19: Acting Assistant Secretary Chang’s schedule changed and she will not be able to join us. Please plan to participate in a robust discussion during this hour, to share information and compile a list of issues and questions to take back to ACF and the Children’s Bureau. Looking towards the October 1 implementation deadline of this landmark child welfare reform law: What should the new administration be focused on? Do states and providers need additional guidance? Would technical amendments to FFPSA or Medicaid law remove implementation barriers? How can we help achieve the full benefit of Family First?

2:30 – 2:50 Break

Lindsey Browning will return to the NACBH forum to update us on the State Medicaid Directors’ leadership agenda to comprehensively improve children’s services and systems as the public health emergency recedes. The first two reports in a three-report Medicaid Forward series, released earlier this year, focused on behavioral health and children’s health. We will hear about this ambitious blueprint for the “next normal” as well as NAMD’s overarching federal policy priorities, and offer feedback from the field.

Michelle Sanborn, President
The Children’s Alliance, Lexington, Kentucky

David Napier, CEO, and
Peggy Kelly, Chief Clinical Officer
Youth Home, Inc., Little Rock, Arkansas

One of the thorniest questions that states must answer in implementing Family First's congregate care provisions is, "Whether and when a Qualified Residential Treatment Program (QRTP) versus a Psychiatric Residential Treatment Facility (PRTF)?" From her many years of navigating Kentucky's child welfare and Medicaid systems, advocating at the state and federal levels for improvements, and working with colleagues in widely varying systems in the National Organization of State Associations for Children, Michelle Sanborn will help us answer this question. Youth Home, Inc. is one of the first provider organizations in the country to operate both a PRTF and a QRTP. We welcome David Napier and Peggy Kelly to share their administrative and clinical insight into the multiple issues beneath "whether and when" to inform other providers' and states' implementation.

As we do every year, we will welcome a key official from the Center for Medicaid and CHIP Services to share developments on policies relating to children’s behavioral health services.

Recurring topics include the interaction of FFPSA with Medicaid, how CMS and the Children’s Bureau are working together to ensure seamless health care coverage and, apart from foster care, any changes in how the Medicaid IMD exclusion is applied to programs serving children and adolescents. With the new CMS Administrator recently confirmed by the Senate, we hope to gain insight into priorities and directions under the Biden Administration, particularly around reviving Medicaid access regulations, updating guidance for school-based services, and clarifying sub-regulatory policy for the IMD exclusion.

We will, of course, touch on the Medicaid IMD exclusion with our experts.
